UH College of Medicine Receives First Scholarship Endowment

The University of Houston College of Medicine has received a $25,000 gift from The Indian Doctors Association (IDA) of Houston to establish its first scholarship endowment. Administered by the University of Houston Foundation, The Indian Doctors Association of Houston Endowed Scholarship will be given to students of Indian descent or who are members of an active student South Asian organization.

Founded in 1986, IDA is a non-profit, networking forum for physicians of Indian origin to provide support for charity health care in the greater Houston area, raise funds to support college and medical school scholarships for local high school and medical students, and provide health education for residents throughout the community. With a growing membership, IDA provides its members with opportunities to attend free educational seminars, mentoring programs, volunteer within and outside the United States as well as participate in social, networking mixers.

IDA President, Dr. Jignesh Shah hopes their gift will foster the growth of caring and compassionate physicians among the prevalent Indian physician community in Houston. “We want our scholarship to attract students of strong, ethical character who will go on to become future leaders in medicine,” said Dr. Shah. We value the diversity at the University of Houston and look forward to future collaborations with the College of Medicine.”

Dr. Shah has been with IDA for six years and values the education, mentoring and philosophy of giving back that is inherent in the organization’s mission. “In working with our members and various student groups, I want to pass on the importance of paying it forward,” said Dr. Shah. That is my wish for the UH medical students who receive our scholarship.”

“We are delighted that The Indian Doctors Association wants to play a role in the College of Medicine and provide our students with the financial means to become caring, ethical physicians,” said Dr. Stephen Spann, founding dean of the UH College of Medicine.

Update from a 2019 IDA Scholarship Recipient

Stephanie Zuniga

Hello my name is Stephanie Zuniga, and I applied to this scholarship when I was looking for a glimpse of hope. In May of 2018 my house was destroyed by a fire and my family could not possibly contribute to the cost of college. As I learned about this organization, I believed I had a chance to acquire help from IDA, considering they value education and look for success as much as I do. Receiving the acceptance email was life changing; I regained my hope of attending college. I currently attend the University of Houston where I study Computer Science, without IDA's contribution this wouldn't be possible, I am in my second's semester and I'm very grateful for the opportunity of getting a higher education.
